I follow lots of WW accounts. I love seeing how people eat, how they plan, how they navigate eating out.

But several times I've heard women say that they passed up having dinner with their adult kids because they didn't have the points, or the restaurant didn't happen to have lighter options and they have declined the invitation.

My advice is SAY YES! It's one meal. If you get asked out to eat by your adult children, don't even hesitate with an answer. Hannah and Jacob invited me out to dinner on Friday night to a local ramen restaurant called RamenDobo - so good! I asked for extra spicy on the side and it was so flavorful and delicious. Best part is that I was only able to eat half, and I had the other half for lunch the next day.

Life is too short not to make memories around a table with your children.

POTATO CRUSTED QUICHE

One of my favorite meal prep breakfasts to make is quiche. It is an amazing way to use up those veggies that didn't get eaten during the week.

Yesterday Hannah and I had a Boozy Brunch cooking class and one of the dishes we made was a potato crusted zucchini quiche. We accidentally left the ham out of the recipe, so this is vegetarian. Feel free to add extra protein if you like.

INGREDIENTS

1 cup liquid egg white
2 large eggs
1 cup milk of choice (I am using unsweetened almond)
2 teaspoons minced garlic
2 cups shredded zucchini, squeezed dry
4 ounces cheese of choice (I am using sharp cheddar)
1 medium potato (mine was 8 oz)**
salt, pepper, crushed red pepper to taste

Directions

Heat oven to 350. Spray Pam in a non-stick skillet. Add garlic and cook for 1 minute. Add shredded zucchini and ham and cook for about 5 minutes over medium heat.

Meanwhile, mix eggs, egg white, milk and cheese. Cook potato in microwave on baked potato setting. Let cool slightly. Slice and place on bottom of pie pan. Sprinkle with salt and pepper.

Add the zucchini ham mixture on top of potato mixture, and spread evenly. Pour egg mixture over the top, and sprinkle with a bit more salt and pepper. Bake for 45 minutes. Let cool 10 minutes before cutting.

** I am using previously baked potatoes - you can also buy sliced canned potatoes.

This makes 4 servings, 1/4 of the pie: On #teamgreen it's 7 points, on #teambblue it's 6 points and on #teampurple it's 5 points

LIFE

The farmers market is in full swing. I'd missed the last two weekends when my brother was in town and when my Mom and I were in Wisconsin. The Waypoint Farm is where I get my greens and herbs.

Stephan sells the vegetables and his girlfriend started selling cut flower arrangements. If you don't have anyone in your life to buy you flowers, just buy them yourself - you are worth it!

Hannah and I had our rescheduled Grilling 101 class last Wednesday - one thing I didn't take into consideration was the weather, and while it poured in the morning, it cleared up by the time our class started. We grilled skinny pizza dough and it was amazing! My gas grill doesn't have high flames, so we were able to build our pizza on parchment paper, and just place it right on the rack. After five minutes, I was able to remove the parchment paper and got a super crispy crust. So good! Side note: not the hugest fan of the Lite Mozzarella from Trader Joe's anymore.

Maybe because I've been using part skim while it's been unavailable?

My 90 day challenge is still going strong - well - sort of! While I am tracking everything, last week exercise fell to the wayside. Hope to get more movement in this week, but I have tracked everything (even wine!) into the Loselt App for 27 days!!! That is a record.

Hannah and Jacob have a pool in their townhome complex and Hannah and I swam for two hours yesterday - so much fun!
